Taylor comes clean

Pyles owner takes year to 'fess up

By Scoop Bias

Dugway Herald

CHICAGO — The confession almost went unnoticed. Denver Pyles owner Mike Taylor had something to get off his chest, and it seemed his subtle way of telling his fellow TFL owners would slip right by them.

"Yeah, I made two trips to New York last year," Taylor said. Nothing strange about that, right?

"Well, the first time I went to our convention hotel to check in," Taylor said. "I asked for Steve Katz's room. They said, 'We don't have a Steve Katz registered. Um, there is a reservation for Mr. Katz next Thursday . . .'"

Taylor admitted it hit him then. He had arrived for the 2001 TFL convention a week early. But, he didn't let it get him down too long.

"I asked if they would store my luggage, then I went out to the U.S. Open and caught an entire day of great tennis," Taylor said.

After the tennis was over, Taylor went back to the hotel, collected his bags, then caught a flight back to Denver.

And the following Friday he did it all over again, only this time to find the other TFL owners waiting for him.

Just one question for Mr. Taylor. Why on earth did it take you a year to tell anyone?

▼ CHEECHAKO TAKES EARLY LEAD: The TFL opened this season with two new teams and a realignment overhaul. For the first times, the teams are divided into two conferences.

The Sourdough and Cheechako conferences go head-to-head during weeks 1, 2, 8, and 9. The Cheechako won five of the eight games during Week 1 to take the early lead.

▼ CATCHPHRASE OF THE DRAFT: The New York draft in 2001 started a new TFL tradition. A catchphrase that was used ad naseum during the draft. Then, it was 'throw them out,' in reference to slimming down the number of TFL teams.

In Chicago, it became something else. After looking at the newest members of the TFL and their picks in the first two rounds of the 2002 draft, Mike Taylor began it by saying 'God, I love expansion.'

As Marley and Tampa Bay continued to take players like Jeff Blake and Aaron Stecker, everyone at draft headquarters was shouting, "God, I love expansion."
